Direction I: Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

According to one old song, love and marriage go together like a horse and carriage. This days, however, a long lasting marriage may be almost as hard to find as a horse and carriage on our busy streets. Statistically, it is now more likely that a marriage will end in divorce than continue in a loving relationship. It makes you wonder if getting married it worth the effort.

Is it simply the case that marriage has become a gamble with less than a50% chance of success? Not really, say researchers at the Newport Institute, who have discovered that there are clear clues to what makes a successful marriage. The Newport researchers have been conducting a study of married couples for the past ten years. They started with 50 pairs of newlyweds and interviewed them every six months. During that time, 11 of the couples dropped out of study,15 couples split up and 24 couples stayed married. The researchers were delighted that so many of their couples stayed together, but they don't think that it was simply a matter of luck.

One clear sign of a happy relationship is the frequent use of 'we' by a couple. This is one indication that the couple speaks with a single voice about their experiences. Another clue is how past experiences are described. The happily married couples tend to focus on their experiences together, even when describing difficulties. As an example, two different couples described holidays in which their suitcases were lost. One couple (still married) reported that it was one of their best memories became they went out and bought some really different clothing and had a crazy time. Another couple (no longer married) ended up blaming each other for everything going wrong during the holiday.

Researchers have also noticed that individuals in successful marriages tend to talk about their spouses in much more positive ways. They focus on accomplishments. They often mention something new they enjoy doing now because of their partner. They also seem to be willing to change in ways that allow the couple to do things together. In marriage that aren't working, there is more focus on self. One of the individuals typically insists that he or she will not stop doing something despite the fact that it is a source of conflict. Sometimes one of them will say that he or she actually prefers it that the other has separate interests. .

When the researchers asked couples what advice they would give to younger people thinking about getting married, they got some revealing answers. Among those who eventually get divorced, the man would often give a response that was quite different from the women's. It was obvious that these individuals had really different views about marriage. Among those who remained married, the answer were more similar and often referred to the ideas of friendship, support and ' being the same team' on the basis of their study , the researchers have concluded that modern marriage may begin with passionate love, but it is survived depends a lot on ;compassionate love;, a feeling that includes affection, caring and friendship.
