Part –One: Reading Passage

Directions: Read the following passage and choose the correct answer

Desertification

1. Desertification is the reduction of the biological productivity of land to law levels. Especially as a result of human action in semi- arid areas. A French forester called Abbeville to include the environmental degradation that accompanies the destruction of forests in humid regions originally used the word.

2. Attention was directed to the problem of desertification in the early 1970's at the time of the Saharan draught and famine. It was suggested that the damaging effects of rainfall deficiencies had been accentuated by long continued reduction of the plant cover and accompanying deterioration and erosion of the soils. The degradation was often attributed to the production of crops for export at a time when people and domestic animals were increasing in number and subjecting the biological resources of the semi- and sub-human lands for ever greater pressure.

3. The environmental degradation resulting from human activity is probably best documented and most readily traced inquire different areas in Africa, notably on the islands of Sthelena Mauritius and at the cape, where European settlers within a few decades around 1700, are known to have destroyed the original plant cover as well as many animal species with resultant accelerated soil erosion, less of fertility and impaired water supplies.

4. Careful uses of soils , woodland ,and steams can conserve natural resources even in semi-arid environments .Terracing of steep stops ,building check Dams across wad is ,restricting the felling of trees, firing grass early in the dry season before it burns too strongly ,and regulating the movements of flocks and herds so as not to over graze the rangeland can all be managed by settled people under a stable .

5. Soil erosion and other forms of degradation tend to worsen slowly and then once a critical stage is reached, they accelerate rapidly .If preventive action is taken in good time the situation remains manageable; but once a critical stage is passed, counter- measures become very costly. The situation tends to become serious at times when climatic extremes result in flood and droughts .Desertification itself may accentuate both hazards.

6. Ethiopia has suffered badly from desertification of the highlands and resultant water erosion and also from grazing of the esteem lowlands, some action has been taken to introduce soil conservation structures, but effective action in the most degraded areas was prevented until recently by the civil war a number of soil conservation schemes have started and efforts stress the need to gain popular support. (Adapted from the changing Geography of Africa by Vruve A.T)
